National Consultation on 'Services Trade and Domestic Regulation in India'

The National Consultation on 'Services Trade and Domestic Regulation in India' under the project entitled, 'Services Trade and Domestic Regulation: A Multi-Country Study in Commonwealth Asia, Africa and the Caribbean' with the support of Commonwealth Secretariat, London was held in New Delhi, on November 29, 2007.

This seminar also played the dual role of serving as the national consultation for both, Services Trade and Domestic Regulation and the South Asia Forum for International Trade (SAFIT) projects, which focuses on 'Domestic Preparedness' of the five South Asian countries, namely Bangladesh, Nepal, Sri Lanka, Pakistan, and India to face the challenges of trade liberalisation and globalisation in service sector.

Its objectives were to deliberate and invite comments from various stakeholders on the research done, with a view to incorporate the comments into the synthesis paper which will act as a policy advocacy document for future. About 15 participants comprising policy makers, civil society representatives, inter-governmental agencies, academicians, research institutes, development practitioners and media attended the seminar.

Institutions and Pro-Poor Growth Meeting

A two-day meeting for the Institutions and Pro-Poor Growth (IPPG) second phase researchers was held in Jaipur, on December 18-19, 2007, spearheaded by the University of Manchester to showcase the project proposals for research from all over the world.

About 14 participants, representing civil society organisations (CSOs) from all over the world attended the conference. Kunal Sen from the University of Manchester and Adrian Leftwich, Professor of Political Science from University of York, and other experts were panellists. The first day comprised of individual sessions wherein each project was presented, discussed and debated. The second day was more focussed towards fine-tuning research methodology through further comments and discussion.

UPCOMING EVENTS

CUTS, in association with South Asian Network on Economic Modelling (SANEM) and Commonwealth Secretariat, London will be organising a regional conference on 'Services Trade Liberalisation in South Asia' in Dhaka, on January 23-24, 2008.

The conference intends to analyse service sector liberalisation so far undertaken in the region, as well as highlight the opportunities and risks present from the liberalisation process. It will also explore the potential implications of South Asia Free Trade Agreement (SAFTA) for the Member countries.

It is expected that the conference would provide an open forum for discussion and debate on these issues amongst policy makers, researchers, private sector participants as well as South Asian CSOs.

Opening of services sector better living standards

Business Standard, December 03, 2007

By Rituparna Bhuyan

India has been unilaterally opening its services sector over the past decade, and the liberalisation in the sector is in the excess of the offers it made in the World Trade Organisation (WTO). Experts say that even though services sector reforms carried out by India have not been reciprocated to a great extent at the international level, but it is helping its citizens access better quality of life.
