

Future of the WTO or WTO of the Future?

23

June, 2022
Thursday

15:00-16:30 (IST)
11:30-13:00 (CST)

PASCAL LAMY
Former Director-General
WTO

AMITA BATRA
Professor of Economics
Jawaharlal Nehru University

MARK LINSOTT
Nonresident Senior Fellow
South Asia Center, Atlantic Council

DEBORAH ELMS
Founder and Executive Director
Asian Trade Centre

MIA MIKIC
Advisor, ARTNeT

PRADEEP S MEHTA
Secretary General
CUTS International
(Welcome Remarks)

MONTEK SINGH AHLUWALIA
Former Deputy Chairman
Planning Commission of India
(Moderator)

WTO Members have been able to successfully negotiate a package of decisions and declarations at the WTO's Twelfth Ministerial Conference (MC12) in Geneva. In the almost five years since the last Ministerial Conference, the WTO had been subject to enormous strain. MC12 was being seen as a make-or-break moment for the organisation.

After intense negotiations and trade-offs, Members have finally been able to conclude a multilateral agreement at the WTO. Outcomes relating to a pandemic response package, waiver of Trade-Related Aspects of Intellectual Property Rights (TRIPS) obligations for Covid-19 vaccines, food security, and electronic commerce have breathed new life into the institution.

Yet, Members have been able to only acknowledge the concerns regarding WTO dispute settlement, without addressing them. The full restoration of a well-functioning adjudication mechanism for trade disputes remains a formidable task.

Also, the WTO has to deal with the challenges inherent in governing disparate economic systems. Groups of countries have been pre-empting and establishing WTO-beyond rules, such as in e-commerce, in blocs and thus, leaving others having genuine development concerns vis-à-vis those issues.

Can the WTO maintain the momentum from MC12, and will WTO reform succeed? Or, will we need a new WTO of the future?

